Dear Danielle,

A long overdue thank you for the brilliant event you created in Cannes for Wall Street: Money Never Sleeps. We simply could not have asked for more. All of our guests had the loveliest time because it was so precisely executed but at the same time had an easy feeling of informality, which was exactly the intended goal of the evening. Instead of the usual stampede, they were able to spend time with one another in a magical atmosphere with good food, inviting cocktails, a cunning color scheme and perfectly selected music that was convivial but never intrusive. As a result, they stayed far longer into the night than they normally would have otherwise. In fact, it was the most unlike a Cannes party I have ever attended, which is mentioned to you here as the highest form of compliment. It was great fun to watch it all unfold, knowing the meticulous planning behind everything.

We are still receiving appreciative notes over a month later and I know that this is in large part due to your unique contributions. You have a very creative eye, think on your feet, know how to get things done efficiently without padding, and your intuitive instincts allow you to use a shorthand with experts—be they caterers, florists, lighting technicians, rental companies, security, ground transportation, sponsors, all of it—that you make everyone want to be part of the collaboration. It is inspiring to watch and a great pleasure working with you. You never lose your sense of calm or humor.

I am glad we took a chance on the then unknown Danielle Pelland when we hired you in Cannes now several years ago to work on the STAR WARS event with only a shoestring budget and you managed to make the most out of the situation. In its own way, that night was also a triumph. It was only a matter of time before we would do it again. The thought of returning to the festival in 2011 gives me hives but if we do end up there, please know that you will be a part of whatever it is we end up doing. You are that good.

Hope to see you before then!

Warm regards,

Hilary Clark
